Google officially announced the first developer preview of Android 11 for Android TV devices. The new version can only be installed on developer hardware, so do not try to use it. Google says Android 11 will bring “many privacy, performance, accessibility and connectivity.” The first developer preview for Android 11 on smartphones fell way back to February. Now it is in its early beta period which means we are on track to see it in stable form this summer. However, the version of Android 11 due on Android TV devices is beginning its life cycle today. Google revealed to Android Blog developers that the first developer preview for Android 11 will be available for ATV developers from now on. Obviously, this means that the stable rollout of Android 11 will come to TV and streaming boxes much later than it will be for smartphones (although this is not surprising). Related: Best Android TV devices: What are your options? To be clear, this is only for developers and will only work on hardware focused on the developer, especially the ADT-3 streamers provided by Google. Do not try to install this on your Nvidia Shield TV or Sony TV, as this will cause a lot of trouble. Google says that the Android TV version of Android 11 will come with “many privacy, performance, accessibility and connectivity features.” We will have to wait until developers can break it to know what exactly these statements might mean, though. What we are interested in is whether or notmysterious streaming stick will be mentioned in the Android 11 code. Stay tuned. Google Android TV has been a very needy entry into the streaming box space, offering a number of smart features and an intuitive user interface in the process. Is the platform gaining traction though? Well, a Google executive gave the answer. The smart TV platform is currently used by “million content” of people. Shalini Govil-Pai, senior director of product management for Android TV, said Multichannel News (h/t: Android Police). Govil-Pai says that the platform is mainly used by consumers in Asia and Europe, adding that half of all users come through Google's operator partners. In fact, the executive notes that the platform has been implemented by over 100 paid TV operators worldwide. The market also seems to warm up in the United States, as AT&T is already testing a box powered by Google. Meanwhile, TiVo reportedly should launch an Android TV-powered box at CES next month. It was a couple of years from Android TV came out and was slowly maturing as a platform. It has multiple apps and games available for it than ever before. There might be ...It doesn't hurt that there are a lot of Android TV devices, such as the Xiaomi Mi Box and the Nvidia Shield TV. The first is currently sold by how Walmart in the United States, starting with $60. Meanwhile, Nvidia's Shield TV has been on the market since 2015, offering the usual experience next to a gaming focus. MoreOEM TVs were slow to deliver Oreo though, not to mention Android Pie. Oreo has brought several new features, such as Google Assistant integration and a homescreen channel-based layout. Meanwhile, Pie brings better performance on low-end devices, an easier configuration process if you have an Android phone and automatic filling feature. NEXT: Android in 2018 is the opening act for Android in 2019 The easiest way to get Android TV on virtually any device is with a top set box. However, there is a small selection of TVs that come with Android TV integrated. There are some advantages to get a TV with Android TV. For beginners, everyone comes with Chromecasts. Besides, you just need a remote instead of two. There are some great selections here, although not all are available anywhere. Here are the best Android TVs! Best Android TV to buy:Note by Editor: We are updating this list of the best Android TVs regularly as new. What are my options? Unfortunately, the list of TV manufacturers selling Android TV are quite slim. Includes Hisense, Philips, Sharp and Sony with some smaller players here and there. Most TVs run a business operating system, such as Samsung with its Tizen platform, while other partners with third-party providers, such as TCL and its partnership with Roku. Thus, the TV list with Android is rather short and is dominated by Hisense and Sony in most parts of the world. However, if you do not find anything you like in this list, you canon the official website to see all global partners. This should give you some additional options that we might have miss.1. Best General Android TV: Sony A9G Sony A9G is the best choice for Android TV. It is Sony's latest OLED offer and comes with a metric ton of features. The image is exceptional and the OLED screen gives you perfect blacks and the highest contrast ratio possible for a television. It comes with a slim design, decent TV speakers, and enough HDMI ports for anything you need. The reviewers complained about the color calibration outside the box. However, this is quite easy to solve with a little patience. The Android TV experience is positive as well. You can use Google Assistant on any HDMI input to ask for anything you need. Of course, like most Android TVs, there is an integrated Chromecast and TV increases the content better than most. The A9G represents not only the best option in this space, but also the most expensive one at the time of writing. Buy 9G to AMAZON2. Best midrange Android TV: Sony X950H We are back with Sony for our midrange option. It is a LED TV with a full range of local dimmers. This means that it does not have edge lights like most LED TVs, it has a lot of lights throughout the TV that turns on independently. Full matrix lighting gives LED TVs deeper than many televisions on board and can make some other clean tricks. This TV is still quite expensive, but comes with the merchandise. It very well elevates the old content.exceptional brightness for hdr content, a wide range of colors, and a contrast ratio above average. of course, android tv turns an excellent selection of functions. we like this TV for its small beauties. the back of the TV legs is empty so you can hide the cables. Besides, all four hdmi doors support hdmi 2.0, a feature that is becoming more common but it is still a bit difficult to find constantly. does not support 120hz update rates and viewing angles are predictably bad, but otherwise, this is a rock-solid TV. make money to amazon3. best low-end android tv: hisense h8g hisense h8g is a surprisingly decent tv for its price. comes with a complete range of local dimmers like the sony x950h much more expensive and can produce a comparable contrast and black levels. image quality, peak brightness, lower resolution increase, and colors are all surprisingly good for a TV at this price range. some reviewers complain about uniformity, but you should not see any problem unless you really look for it. peripherals are also good. all four hdmi doors support hdmi 2.0 unfortunately, there is no hdmi 2.1 support or earc support, but not a lot of tv have those at any price range. supports hdr10 and dolby vision and this puts it on par with most other TVs on this list. In short, all right. the biggest problems we found include gray and black uniformity in some scenarios, sound, out of the color calibration of the box, and work awarmer than most TVs. of course, there are small things here and there that the most expensive TVs do best. You're also paying more than double for those little things. that makes hisense one of the smartest options for those who buy on a budget, especially when you consider that you do not need to buy an additional set top box or chromecast. buy hisense h8g a amazon4. best budget android tv: skyworth q20300 skyworth q20300 is among the cheapest android tv on the market. 55 inches run for $450 at the time of this writing while its 32 inches (perfect for bedrooms) size works for only $150. Considering that most people don't know skyworth, we understand if this is not your first option. TV has its right share of flaws. However, for $150, you really shouldn't expect the moon here. TV has color, sound, brightness and contrast, but absolutely will not blow you up. Keep in mind, we're talking about the $200 sub category here. Of course you're making sacrifices that come down like this. said this, the android TV part works pretty well, but it will occasionally lag. some people reported wifi falls and we also experienced those, although rarely. If you really want a smaller, cheaper TV, we recommend you find something else and go for a chromecast or, if you want something in the range of 55 inches, then the extra spring $150 and go for the much better hisense h8g. we have included this tv for completeness.He's just here because he doesn't have competition. It is the cheapest Android TV. Buy the Skyworth Q20300 here!5. The best for international people: Philips 804 OLED It is extremely disappointing that Philips does not sell its 804 OLED TV in the United States. This is a 1.400 € OLED TV with excellent image quality, decent elevation and, like all OLEDs, a perfectly functional contrast ratio. Unfortunately, due to availability, I was unable to personally check this out. So, I'm leaning a bit of reviews for my information here. The specifications are as you would expect. Includes four HDMI-out ports, built-in Chromecasts, and a remote control with activated voice commands. Philips apparently did a great job by calibrating TV colors as most reviews put neck and neck with Sony and LG OLED offers. In addition, sound quality is apparently also surprisingly good for a TV. Read also: The best media streaming devices you can buyPurtropo, this is only available in selected regions and our link to buy is from Amazon Germany. Those in Europe and countries outside the United States should definitely consider this. Those in the United States are blocked with the previous four options. BUY THE PHILIPS 804 ON AMAZONIn most cases, it is normally recommended to take a set-top box rather than an entire TV if you like Android TV. Yes, you need an HDMI slot, but you can upgrade a set-top box much easier than you can upgrade a TV. Moreover, the content is becoming bigger and requires morehardware every year.
